

C5

Guernsey Press

30 September 2010

orchid
COMMUNICATIONS

C5 brings in sixth member of team

A NEW business analyst and technical project manager has joined the team at C5 Alliance.

The appointment of Matt Thornton means the Channel Island IT solutions business has boosted its Guernsey team to six full-time consultants, with further growth expected in the coming months.

Mr Thornton joins C5 from the Healthspan Group, where he held the position of software development manager.

With exposure throughout the business, he was involved in scoping out and project managing complex infrastructure projects down to hands-on programming.

His key skills are in understanding business requirements and translating them into technical requirements and back again.

C5 managing director Mark Loane said he was delighted to have another specialist on board.

'Matt embodies the ethos of C5, which is to consistently bring the latest technologies to the island but in a clear, concise and beneficial way.

'We are continually investing in our knowledge and understanding of the latest trends and it is vital we recruit the best candidates to keep us at the forefront of such a rapidly changing industry.'

'Matt embodies the ethos of C5, which is to consistently bring the latest technologies to the island but in a clear, concise and beneficial way'

Managing director Mark Loane

Mr Thornton has more than seven years' experience in the IT industry, primarily in software and database development in a number of key technologies.

A Prince2 practitioner, he has project managed application and infrastructure projects from start to finish and, with a PhD in remote sensing and computer science, has presented scientific research at international conferences and still provides expert peer review and editing services to journals and publishing houses in a range of technical subjects.

